INTRODUCING:

Safetyville

Child Safety Game

Do you know the answers to the following safety questions?

1. You are home alone and a police officer comes to the door and says there is an emergency and that you should let him/her in. What should you do?
2. If your child is separated from you in a store, who can your child turn to for help?

You might be surprised by the answers to these questions!
(see inside)

Did you know that 1,000,000 children
are reported missing annually in the United States. That is more than one child every 30 seconds. Give your customers Safetyville, an educational board game that helps keep them safe.

Picture them safe

Good Job! You stayed safe by telling your parents and teachers about a student who has classmates slip ahead 2 spaces.

Oops! Safety mistake! You kept a secret from your parents. Move back 1 space.

Good job! You stayed safe by not taking a message that had an address and phone number. A message that had an address and phone number is not safe.

Children have so much fun playing Safetyville that they don't even realize they are learning how to stay safe in today's unsafe world.

Here are the answers to the questions:

1. Dial 911 and verify that the person at your door is actually a police officer. Then follow the 911 operator's instructions.
2. Moms with children are a great source for help if a store employee wearing a badge or a police officer is not available.

Show your customers you care about them by giving them a Safetyville Board Game!
